Mrs. Cornelius now enjoyed for a time a full fruition of glory, and turned up her nose at the Grecian Temple over the way. But people who lived in a Grecian Temple ought not to be seen riding in an old farm wagon of walking afoot; so Cernelius bought a fine second-hand coach, the price of which was included in the next dis-

But, though the wife was as proud as a fashionable bankrupt for millions, poor Cornellus felt himself humil-isted to the dust. He was no more his own master, and he felt that his farm was no longer his own. His Gre-cian Temple and his fertile fields, instead of being a source of enjoyment, only increased his regrets, for he felt he vitably lose them ere long. One of those periodical tornadoes to which the credit system is subject was heard to rumble at a distance; the little bank benewed, as they expected a run before long. In brief, practius's note was protested; his mortgage foreclosed; Cornelius a note was processed; his moregage recrusively his farm knocked down at public sale for just enough to pay his note, and bought in by the stool-pigeon, who thus turned his paper promises into land; Mrs. Cornelius placed away and died of disappointed vanity; and poor Cornelius, his children having been long since taken from im, has for many years found shelter and food with a instant kinsman, where he shares the common lot of that are and poverty—neglect and contempt. He is now up-age of fourscore, and is waiting patiently for the lest ple of poor Cornelius does not stand alone. It is the istory of thousands of honest farmers who have fallen victims to the mischievous facilities for running in debt aforded by the banks. But while we pity, let us not jus-ify them. Though often deceived and deluded by othibility rosts with them. Reason must have taught them had to borrow money of a bank payable every sixty eys, at six or seven per cent. interest, is invariably a pired exclusively to the improvement of their land, the orrowed capital. They are in fact laboring not for ere tenants at will, and, instead of being independent armers, become the slaves of banks.

A Verenan Dank of the days of the Revolution.—The Conneautville (Pa.) Courier says that "the oldest known person in Western Pennsylvania is Mrs. Donaghy, mother in-law of Samuel Wetmore, of Spring township, with whom she resides. Saturday, October 31, was her one hundredth birthday; she celebrated it by riding to this hundredth birthday: she celebrated it by riding to this place, visiting Nichols dagner.con room:—Oreach which she climbed two long flights of stairs—and sitting for her likeness. Before she left town she called on us, told her age, &c. She sits upright, is healthy, smart and active; has good eyesight, and does not seem older than many persons of sixty-five or seventy years. When the battle of Bunker Hill was fought she was a resident of that immediate vicinity, and during the battle was obliged to leave her home for safety. She afterwards visited the ground, with others, and administered to the wounded and dying. She distinctly remembers the doings of revolution days, and speaks of various scenes she witnessed with great annimation."

According to the following extract from a letter, dated san Juan del Norte, October 3, the coup de grace has been given to Col. Kinney's famous scheme of colonization in Nearagua: "Advertisements in English and Spanish are Fosted up about town notifying the public that all the certain property, &c., known and described within certain boundaries, or 'all right, title, and interest of Henry L. Kinney' therein, will be offered for sale at public auction on the 3d day of November next, by virtue of a mortgage duly recorded and held by Mesars. Samuel S. Wood & Son, of this town. Alas! how are the migrity fallen."

We learn from Philadelphia that the stockholders of the Pennsylvania Bank held a meeting in that city on Monday, when Col. Patterson, the president, and the local of directors, resigned their posts. Resolutions were passed appointing a committee to investigate the frauds and select new directors. Col. Patterson said that no report could be made under present circumstances, but it has possible that by careful nursing the debt: of the bank could be paid, and perhaps the bank resuscitated. Many of the speakers denounced President Allibone in Bost severe terms. John M. Dutton defended his character, and declared that he would return, and no one would dare then repeat the shader. Great confusion followed, and a storm of hisses and groons interrupted the speaker. A resolution to accept the act legalizing the asspension was adopted, when the meeting adjourned.

General Rusk was no ordinary man. A gon of an Irish emigrant, who settled in South Catolina; and without the adventitious aid of fortune or friends, he educated Georgia and settled in Texas, then a province of Mexico, and at the time of her declaration of independence we San facilito, and uport the investor of Texas by Santa Anna with 7,000 Mexican troops, the choice of his army, and whilst the balance of the Texan cabinet fled towards the sea-shore for safety, Rusk joined the army of inde-pendence under General Houston. His presence was halled with enthusiasm, as "his voice was still for war;" and, at the consultation of officers previous to the battle, General Houston observed to Rusk, "You think we must fight; I think so too;" and this led to the battle of San Jacinto and the independence of Texas. The result of that battle is before the world as a matter of history, but in that battle, one of the most extraordinary and glorious on record, either of ancient or modern times, General Rusk commanded the left wing, and, upon the commander-in-chief being desperately wounded and taken to the rear, the command devolved upon Rusk; and just at that momentous crisis, upon which hung the destiny of the nation, a halt was made, but Rusk, spurring up at the moment, his lond clarion voice was heard amid the din of battle, "On boys, on, now or never." And on they went, following him to victory or death. In this battle, stamped more with remance than reality, be captured in single combat the most gallant of the Mexican generals, General Almonte, and received his

After the battle and capture of Santa Anna, such wa the torture of General Houston's wound that he found it necessary to leave the army and visit New Orleans for surgical aid; and in his address to the army he used this language: "General Rusk is appointed to command the army for the present. I confide in his valor, his patriotism, and wisdom. His gallant conduct in the battle of San Jacinto was sufficient to secure your confidence and regard." (Vide History of Texas.) And such was the mbounded popularity of General Rusk that his appointment was received with acclamation. Upon the establishment of Texan independence, being known as an able Justice of the Republic, and in that angust position it was his high prerogative to create order out of chaos, and in that position of "winn cum dignitate" he remained till annexation, although often solicited to become a candidate for the presidency. He was then elected one of the first two United States senators, and entered on this new theatre in the 44th year of his age. Amongst his noble and distinguished compeers he soon attained the front rank, and was pronounced by one of them, Mr. Webster, as "the first upon the democratic side." He was not a distinguished orator, like Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Douglas, or many others, but, like Washing-Webster, Donglas, or many others, but, like Washington, Jefferson, Madison, or Monroe, he seized upon the strongest points of the case and presented them in a manly, candid, clear, and lucid style, that rarely failed of success; and was, in this illustrious body of great men, amongst the first and universally popular, as he had always been upon every theatre upon which he had acted, and took an active and leading part in all great national questions. He had been three times elected to the United States. GLASS Cettason. This Cartron. The Philadelphia Ledger, in speaking of the glass ceilings now in process of preparation in that city, by Mesars. When finished they will present a beautiful appearance. The glass, from its peculiar preparation, will soften, but not materially obstruct, the rays of light, and the effect produced cannot but be pleasing. The art of painting or staining glass is a very old one, and one in which the ancients are thought to have excelled the moderns in richness of coloring and general effect. The latter with them was produced by composing a window, or any other piece of work, with many small pieces, which were soldered together. This plant is still pursued to a limited extent, but most of staining is done upon a sliftly plate.

the figure to be put upon the plate is drawn upon paper, and painted as desired, it is transferred to the glass, which has been prepared to receive it. This has to be done with artistic skill; equal to, that employed upon an oil painting, and requires much more care if its execution. In transferring fruits and flower pieces, all the delicate tints of the objects must be copied with the greatest nicety. The glass is then put into a kiln, and submitted to a heat almost sufficient to fuse it, which not only ha the effect to add greatly to the beauty of the painting but makes it a part of the glass itself, no power being able to remove it. The stained glass made in this country considered equal to that of European manufacture, ough here, as there, everything depends upon the price paid for it. The Messrs. Gibson exhibited specimens from their manufactory at the London Fair, which were nuch admired by European artists with whom they were

A New York, Nov. 10.—At the recent fair of the American Institute, in this city, a silver medal was awarded to Major George G. Henry, of Mobile, Ala., for his improvement in the manufacture of yarns by spinning the seed collider on the plantations. The inventor has contracted with George L. Terger, eag. an extensively known cotton-grower of Yazoo county, Mississippi, (our whose plantation the machinery is to go into immediate operation,) to spin the seed cotton into yarns to the extent of 450 bales per annum for five years. This machine is undoubtedly destined to work an entire change in the manufacture of cotton.

odly destined to work an entire change in the manufac-ture of cotton.

It is proposed to form a joint-stock company under the seberal law of Virginia, with a capital of four millions of dollars in diales of $1,000 each, which will contract with the inventor to farnish the necessary machinery to spin the cotton into yarns, charging no profit on the machine-ry itself, but requiring a tariff—say one-fourth of the profits between the raw material and the spun yarn. It is admitted on all hands that the increase of revenue to the cotton flower will be about 100 per cent.
